KUOPIO HEALTH

Kuopio Living Lab services

Kuopio is one of Finland's leading cities in the fields of health, wellness and safety. The City of Kuopio's strategy emphasises preventive and promotive health services. Kuopio has been an active member of the WHO Healthy Cities Network since 2005.

The City of Kuopio has Living Lab services that companies developing future healthcare solutions can use to test and improve their products and services in an authentic healthcare environment. The Living Lab environment is for primary health care services and is specialised in geriatric and home care. Through Living Lab, companies receive information about the usability of their solutions, while healthcare providers get information about the benefits of the latest solutions and their cost-effectiveness.

KUH Living Lab

Kuopio University Hospital (KUH) is one of the five university hospitals in Finland. KUH provides specialised medical care in an area of 248,000 inhabitants and is responsible for the advanced specialised medical care of nearly a million people in Eastern and Central Finland.

From 2016, the KUH Living Lab project has provided an authentic testing and research environment for health tech companies. The companies can range from small startups to large corporations. All departments and outpatient clinics of the University Hospital have a long practice of collaboration. Our services include product and IT innovation and testing, research collaboration and clinical trials.
